Music Blues

There has been a shortage of good music playing on radios everywhere. It's usually whatever artists can make and call that good music. People everywhere are turning off their radios and driving in silence. This is a huge problem. Usually people at the radio stations would choose new, but good music. But its not quite their fault, its the fans and the artists. The artists keep just pumping out music and don't care about the quality of it and it works for them because people just keep on listening to it.

It's really sad you know? Many teens nowadays are just listening to trash music about sex, drugs, and money and it's just so sad.

-A mom says talking about their teen's music.

A lot of people in the radio industry are concerned, even calling this a massive downfall to music. But they state they only give what the people want. But will it be enough to save the radio industry before it goes to trash? People are trying to protect the art, there are multiple underated artists who have the potential but don't have the fame or reconizement as most other artists do. Artists such as Hasley and Panic! At the Disco. Though they are gaining more fans, they don't have nearly as much as the current "hip" artists.
